Are You Disability Aware?
Person first language is the politically correct way to talk about disabilities. Using person first language shifts our focus from the disability and what is “wrong” to the person. It makes us think about the person first. Remember that persons with disabilities are not a disability or a disease. If you should accidentally offend someone, a sincere apology goes a long way. Use statements such as, John has ADHD or Lucy is a student with a disability. For more information, go to http://learningdisabilities.about.com.
