The Alamo Colleges District continues to warn students of training and job offer scams in which a person contacts students through their student.alamo.edu email.

The scenario below has been reported, but additional approaches could be occurring.

*Student is emailed a job opportunity as an errand assistant. The opportunity is described as a part-time, flexible position offering $600 per week and directs student to email the contact directly.

*Student is contacted by email and offered a job along with a check to cover expenses. Student does receive a check, which is refused at the bank as fraudulent.

*Student is emailed a job offer at a local company and a contact name was provided. The email states that the student is to submit a $2,500 money order to the company. Later, the student receives an offer of funds through a phone app to help pay for the money order.

*Student is contacted by email and offered a campus employment office job opportunity at the convenience of your home or school along with a check to cover expenses.

The Federal Trade Commission has a consumer alert page with scam information on check scams and job offer scams, or visit our Student Security and Scam Awareness page for more information.
